

Mt.Fuji climb on 18th in July 2018

Especially it was damn hot like melt cheese on a pizza this summer.
So I decided to climb alone Mt.Fuji which is 3776 meter above sea level, looking for a cool breeze.

I started to climb at the gate of Route Fujinomiya at 12 p.m midnight .
And I arrived at the top around 4 a.m without a rest.
Then I saw sunrise at 4:40 a.m and walked around the crater.
After that I climbed down and arrived at the gate at 7 a.m.

It was an extremely hard climb of total 7 hours for a round trip.
Fortunately the weather was very good and no wind.
So I could see the galaxy, shooting stars and satellites in the clear night sky.

I was so deeply impressed of the divine sunrise which is calmly rising , and the shadow of Mt.Fuji on the white sea clouds.
And then I put hands together unconsciously.
But the temperature was incredibly cold about 6°C.
I felt like being in a refrigerator.

And it was so hard to breath due to low air pressure almost two third.
Air was so important for us.

I'd fully realized that I could take a step forward like a annual tree ring inside me with the achievement and supremacy experience.

Mountain Climb is really fantastic: I will recommend it to you.
I guarantee it.

At Mizugatsuka parking lot

Sunrise on the sea clouds at the top

The crater on the top

The shadow of Mt.Fuji on the white sea clouds